W. D. MURDOCK, D. P. A.

arine Butchers Who Devour Num

The shark of the lower latitudes is still often honored with such names as the "sea tiger" or the "terror of the ocean." The Spitzbergen fishermen would find a more appropriate use for the latter epithet. Seals, porpoises and even white whales have been known to spring out of the water and run ashore to avoid the attacks of a creature which, in proportion to its size, is cer-tainly the most voracious of all marine beasts of prey. It is the ores or killerwhale, (orca gladiator), a close relation of the delphinidse, but as superior in strength to the southern porpoise as a walrus is to a seal. The orea reaches a length of twenty-five feet, and its jaws are bristling with teeth from four to six inches long and as a sharp as a dirk knife. Single specimens have been seen of thirty (Capt. Ross says thirty-five) feet, and fully able to devour a sea lion with a few quick snaps.

Its digestive power, says the Chicago Herald, is proportioned to the tremen dons efficacy of its jaws. Prof. Eschricht examined a specimen that had been killed in shallow water, and found in its stomach thirteen porpoises and fourteen seals, and the "atrocious glutton, he adds, "seemed to have got choked in the attempt to swallow a fifteenth. since its gullet proved to be obstructed by an intertwisted mass of seal bones Capt. Wicks describes the battle between a Baleen whale and a swarm of oreas that jerked the big monster about as a pack of dogs would worry a fat sow. They flew at its flanks, snapped big pieces out of its lips, and finally hauled it under, while a surge of blood stained foam bespoke the consummation of the submarine butchery.

"These demons will pursue theb largest relatives and pursue them like raging hounds," says Dr. James Murie, who founds his study of the while family on years of personal observation. "In one instance they assaulted a Cali fornia gray whale and her young. The oreas killed the latter and sprang on the mother, tearing away large pieces, which they greedily devoured. Oreas have been known to attack a whitepainted herring boat, mistaking it for a beluga, and they will not hesitate to lay hold of harpooned whales and drag them perforce under water."

The orea is also known as the Greekland grampus, and a good deal of controversy about its murderous propensities has been caused by the fact that some writers have confounded it with its small relative, known as Rino's grampus (phocena grisea), a comparatively harmless creature, found along the east shores of the Atlantic, from St. Helena to Scotland, while the orea is seldom seen south of the fortieth parallel, and is found in shoals only near Spitzbergen and the east coast of Greenland.

Compared with that marine werewolf even the shark is a rather sluggish brute, though he is apt to offset his lack of speed by cunning and patience. The white shark of the tropics will hang about wharves for days and haunt bathing places, rarely betraying his presence by premature gambols. Near Singapore boats manned with lancers and kettledrums cruise about the docks before bathers venture to enter the water, and in the harbor of Havana a man was nipped up a year ago under circumstances which seem to prove that ordinary precautions do not always avail against the cunning of a veteran "man town livery stable, came to the beach with a couple of horses, and after letting them splash about in the shallow water for a minute or two rode in deeper to give them a chance to cool off. A number of promenaders on the beach were watching the horses, when suddenly, to their horror, they saw a big shark rise out of the water, seize the rider's leg and draw him down before he had time to utter more than a single shrick. The water near the scene of the tragedy was not more than waist deep, but the whole thing was done so quickly that attempts at rescue were unavailing, though the witnesses instantly rushed into the water, swinging their sticks and yelling away with might and main.

Like most sluggish creatures sharks are extremely tenacious of life. Tortoises of several species will live for hours after being beheaded, but show the effects of the operation by sitting almost perfectly still or slowly moving their forelegs as if trying to ward off an unseen foe. Decapitated sharks, on the other hand, will continue to use all their tail muscles with destructive force, and in the water have been known to swim about as if nothing unusual had happened, until their vitality became exhausted by loss of blood. Sir Emerson Tennant describes a rather inhuman experiment of that sort in the offing of Trincomale, Ceylon, where a crew of enraged sailors lashed a white shark to the gunwales, amputated its head and flung it over-

The water was perfectly clear and not very deep, and the headless swimmer was seen to swim slowly about for nearly two hours, when its movements gradually became imperceptible, and it settled on the gravelly bottom, its tail limp or stirred only by the rolling of the breakers.

A large shark can snap off the leg of a horse as easily as a carrot, its biting apparatus being entirely different from that of a wolf or a crocodile. The white shark of the Indian ocean, for instance, has six rows of teeth in the upper jaw and five in the lower, each tooth about two inches wide at the base and jagged along the edges like a triangular saw. Besides being as flexible as the best steel, these teeth are always sharp, for the same reason that a cat's claws are sharper than those of a dog.
